

CLUE SHEET

Source 1

Source 2

Internal migration is the movement of people from one place to another within the same country.

Example:

- A person moving from Sydney to Brisbane is participating in internal migration.

International migration is the movement of people from one country to another.

Example:

- A person moving from India to Australia is participating in international migration.

Source 3

Between 1901 and 1973, the White Australia Policy restricted immigration from many non-European countries and encouraged migrants from Britain and Europe; from 1945, Australia promoted large-scale migration, particularly from Europe, to increase its population and workforce after World War II; and from the 1970s onwards, racial restrictions on immigration were removed, allowing people from a wider range of countries to migrate to Australia and contributing to greater population growth and cultural diversity.

Source 4

Population density is the number of people living in a particular space – often measured as people per square kilometre.

Approximate population density figures

Country	Population Density
Australia	About 3.5 people per square kilometre
United States (USA)	About 37 people per square kilometre

